A National Science Foundation Scholarship Program

Courtney Jones is this week's student of the week. Courtney joined the academy in the Fall of 2011. She is a member of the computer science research cluster working with Dr. Parks and she is currently seeking a degree in Computer Science.

Courtney is from Asheville, North Carolina and graduated from T.C. Roberson High School in 2011. Her favorite subject is History. Courtney enjoys baseball and gymnastics, classical, alternative, and rock music, web design, and action/adventure movies.

Courtney's most memorable moment from the Academy thus far is actually being asked by Dr. T to join the Academy while she was just sitting in the hallway waiting for her next class (she didn't even know him at the time!) When asked to provide a quote about how her experience in the Academy, Courtney said, “It's not possible to do everything on your own; but asking for help can make all the difference.” Courtney one day aspires to own her own business for designing and maintaining websites and to become successful and be able to travel and visit other countries while still being able to work with computers.
